Typographic posters

2025, A series of A3 typographic poster explorations

Context

Typography is more than choosing a typeface; it is also about understanding how letters, space and composition work together to communicate visually. This project explored the possibilities of working with a single typeface, Nicolas Cochin, and using its different characteristics to create an engaging poster. It gave me an opportunity to look at typography as a visual element rather than just a tool for presenting text.

My role

Typeface research, typographic experimentation, layout exploration and poster design.

Process

I developed multiple A3 poster layouts, each exploring a different approach to working with Nicolas Cochin. My initial attempts were either too busy or too restrained, which led me to experiment further with volume, spacing, hierarchy and balance.

Outcome

A refined A3 typographic poster developed through multiple layout explorations. The project helped me understand how small changes in spacing, scale and arrangement can influence the overall composition, and gave me more confidence in experimenting with typography as a visual language. It shows my ability to use typography as a visual language, experimenting with scale, spacing, hierarchy and composition to create engaging layouts using a single typeface.
